Dear FDA,

I am outraged that more of our food in the (supposedly) advanced U.S. of A will be irradiated, and that you are not considering labeling irradiated food as such. Regarding docket # 98 N-1038 - I urge you to reconsider whether irradiation is necessary, and label all irradiated foods. If you decide not to, what a good way to further eliminate all the junk posing as food from our diets and buying much more only from farmer's markets, organic farmers, and growing our own food. Since I manage my household of 4 people, I will choose to detach myself from the processed, irradiated junk and I will know that I'm doing the best for ~~that~~ my family. So, I urge you to wake up -- the people don't want irradiation, and they certainly want to know if their food was irradiated. This is 1999. People are waking up. Time to do what's best for the greatest number of people, rather than a few "special interests". Tsk, tsk, tsk.

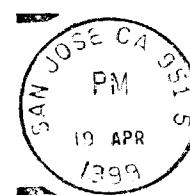

Thank you,
